

I can reiterate all of the reasons that the reactions to recent incidents are overblown and do almost nothing to solve what seems an epidemic of violence.

In its simplest terms the people who would harm others would certainly have access to guns and ammunition whether their motives were driven by premeditated criminal behavior or mental instability. The legislation would leave law abiding citizens vulnerable and disadvantaged by the rescission of a Constitutionally guaranteed right.

Unfortunately the state of our culture dictates more efficacious alternatives. Hardening the targets as the Israelis have done w/ great effect for one. Not allowing the healthcare system to let mentally unstable people fall through the cracks for another.

Reacting in a knee jerk fashion w/o weighing the resultant consequences or better alternatives would be a symptom of failed governance, please do not attack the Second amendment.