

As we speak about how we go forward on guns in this state and the country there are two things that run in my mind. The ability to have guns and ammunition that no normal person needs seems to play out poorly everywhere. It is in effect a tax paid in loved ones and children that I have not had to pay. I never want to. Why is it OK that these people lose loved ones so that others can have what ever they want in arms they don't need. As a conventional tax payer, I don't agree that I want total gun access if it costs society money they would better spend on important things rather than putting officers in all schools and spending millions to protect what our society should never have to. This in not a third world nation, yet. Secondly, I don't give a damn about my second amendment rights if it includes the insanity about arming carelessly and with the costs to society we have seen. Thank you, Nate Cantwell
