

I think we all agree that something needs to be changed following Sandy Hook, but everything I see proposed only affects people who obey laws.

We need to change how we respond to people who can't or won't obey laws. We need to focus on the problem, not law-abiding citizens.

These crimes are usually committed by the insane so maybe we need to focus on mental health issues. These crimes are often committed by the very young, so maybe we need to focus on cultural issues that affect their mores.

Most of all, we need to wait for the official report on Sandy Hook, complete with mental health history, before we jump to any conclusions on what actions might be useful.

Thank you
