I find this interesting and ironic at the same time. North Carolina State Senator R.C. Stoles has a long history of anti-gun beliefs is against gun ownership for the general public. However, he shot one of two intruders at his home in North Carolina. He did not hesitate to defend himself and his family when he believed he was in immediate danger and so was his family. He does not feel his constituents should have that right. Responsible people should have firearms if they want them.
