

The government of the state of Connecticut bears much of the responsibility for the tragedy in Newtown . In Southbury the Training School near me is closing as is Fairfield Hills in Newtown. These places years ago were full, what's happened since? Is there no more mental illness in Connecticut? There are less people in need of help today then before? If you don't help and treat these poor people you should not be surprised when something like Sandy Hook happens. It's not the people of the state who closed these institutions, it's our legislators who now want to penalize law biding gun owners for their own incompetence.
