George Floyd, a petty thief, was killed by Derek Chauvin, a rogue cop, who should never have been a cop in the first place. He did not possess the temperament for police work. I would say one of the most important aspects of being a cop is emotional stability. Police officers' emotional responses are tested routinely in the line of duty. Chauvin's superiors and the union should be made accountable for not firing him, after so many complaints had been lodged against him. So my input into this bill is, psychological testing should be done routinely on every officer to determine if they can cope with the confrontations they have to endure, day in and day out, mentally and physically. Police officers should have routine training on how to cope with confrontation in the line of duty. Charges made against officers should be taken most seriously. There should be protocols in place for psychological testing and charges made against an officer. These protocols should be made available to the public. I am a retired nursing supervisor of the Ct.
